Comment:

This is the first information on the Sudak bombing range. It is of interest with regard to the training of bomber personnel who apparently practiced bombing of sea targets. It is not clear whether these practices were held by special bomber units or whether they represent routine maneuvers. This could only be clarified by reports on the Dzhankoi airfield which was used as an improvised airfield during the German occupation and presumably was improved by the Soviets after the war. No reports have been received on this field.

Comment: The existence of a torpedo plant in this area is not verified.
